Health Care - Educational Therapy

A recent News week article states that 42% of parents believe there is great need for children to receive private outside tutoring.

Why is it so? A variety of reason surfaces really. Many parents are looking for the basics as a counter measure to educational innovations in the last 30 years. Some are willing to build up their child's self esteem with individual attention. Others are looking for their children to get ahead through "preliteracy" and enhancement programmes.

But what if your children has a learning disability and tutoring did not work?

But we have done tutoring.

Why did not it work ?.....

What is the difference between tutoring and educational therapy?
